Along with this thematic and conceptual approach, the course will provide insights on some historical and influential texts on the experience of the city by Simmel, Benjamin, Lefebvre or Michel de Certeau, to name a few. The relation between philosophy, the arts and the city reached new and meaningful forms in the last century and a half, coinciding with the development of the modern metropolis. This stems from the fact that cities are a stimulating aesthetic subject, in the widest sense of the notion of aesthetics, concerning both the way we sense and perceive and the spatio-temporal structures conditioning our experiences. By focusing on philosophical aesthetics, the course will diverge from an urban planning or design perspective, while paying a particular attention to the place and function of aesthetic reflection in the face of the many social, political and ethical challenges posed by contemporary cities.
